

Personal Statement for Political Science

The subject of Political Economy has never stopped amazing me since I opted for it in my academic journey. Although the research on different domains of political economy is frequently being carried out, I feel there is a lot in the world of the economy which is yet to be explored. I find myself an explorer in the huge undiscovered world of political economy, which motivates me to pursue my academic career in the same field. I have been eager to study and apply economics and its self-sufficient theories in different areas of the subject, particularly economics. My first exposure with the political economy were a long time back when I completed my Bachelors (INSERT UNIVERSITY NAME) in the subject and later found myself surprised by its amazing concepts, which motivated me to continue my studies in the same domain. Later, I got myself enrolled in the Masters of Political Economy from (INSERT UNIVERSITY NAME), where I passed the degree with a distinction and most superior grades. This made me realize that I want to continue this subject for my higher degree research.

Luckily, while searching for potential opportunities, I found the Development studies concerning the emerging economies/ political economy course at (INSERT UNIVERSITY NAME), and the program interested me. I have been thinking about a research topic that I would like to peruse for my PhD. After looking at my interests and the research objectives of the institute, I have designed a proposed research plan where I intend to study the political economy of migration: focusing on the impact of migrant labour in the UAE. I want to pursue my higher degree research on the mentioned topic because I have gained professional experience in similar fields while working in the immigration market. I have been working with several international immigration organisations. My work experience has also interested me more in the subject because I have expertise in this era, and it is also related to my previous undergraduate and postgraduate